Form Design

People sure give a lot of shine to living in the moment, but we're more interested in the creative types who day trip in the future. Take our friends at Form, an NYC based design collective that lives out its daydreams. Designer Jerry Tam and crew most recently presented a carnival-inspired resort collection for spring/summer '07, with surrealist makeup and fashion fast forward looks. Each girl played out a different fantasy, with details gleaned from various far-reaching places: the geisha-girl lips on the haute flapper, another's forehead decoration vaguely resembling Arabic script, even a disco Marie Antoinette. Here, we catch a glimpse of an ice princess for the next century. With each model playing out her character against an all-white venue and all-white looks, Form set our blank slate for tomorrow's divine inspiration. We can't wait for next season.
